PRE-PUBLICATION

1. Revisions requested. Presents a novel experimental method of concept analysis that uses procedural generation to produce vignettes diversified vignettes. Applied to the concept of prejudice, the method provides evidence that the concept lacks necessary conditions and reveals the unexpected centrality of negative behaviour. Co-authored with Martin Jönsson.
2. Revisions requested. Challenges the Davidsonian view that truth-value judgments are a function of content and belief. Presents an analysis of quantification that explains variations in truth-value judgments and communicative effects through variations in non-doxastic attentional states rather contextual domain restriction.
3. Under Review. Develops a cognition-focused conception of linguistic content on which certain contents are designed to be evaluated through particular cognitive systems. Extends this conception from generic generalisations to colour attributions, showing how variation in colour perception can explain apparent context-sensitivity.
4. Under Review. Develops a minimalist account of ‘tall’ on which context-sensitivity data is explained through extra-linguistic cognitive variation. The account preserves informative semantic content without positing either a property of tallness or a semantically encoded standard.
5. Under Review. Introduces the notion of alethic illusion, which leads us to misidentify truth values. Develops two novel accounts of generic generalisations that retain the benefits of Sarah-Jane Leslie’s theory while avoiding the truth of prejudiced generics.
